

Another freeride legend chooses iXS Sports Division

The list of mountain biking athletes that rely on iXS Sports Division's helmets and protective gear is both long and illustrious. Now another legend of mountain biking is being added: Canada's Richie Schley has been one of the legendary «Freeriders» from the very beginning, having massive appearances in early freeride movies. Today, Schley is running his own camps in Whistler's bikepark, and he also has a cooperation running with Austria's Bikearena Saalbach-Hinterglemm.

Since Richie Schley is still very active, he needs protective gear that he can fully rely on. And that can be worn all day in the Bikepark with no rubbing or pinching. That's why he does the same as other mountain biking legends such as Hans Rey and Josh Bender and some of today's leading trick specialists such as Darren Berrecloth and Andi Wittmann: He chooses protective gear from iXS Sports Division to keep himself out of hospital and in the saddle.

"Ryan wants to stoke you out" – Ryan Berrecloth signs with iXS

After a promising career in college baseball, Ryan Berrecloth got into mountainbiking thanks to his three-years younger brother Darren – and he never got out of it again. Quickly, Ryan made himself known within the freeriding community by participating in both slopestyle and dirt contests, but mainly by appearing in various freeride movies. Following his brother Darren, which was introduced to iXS by Ryan, he has now signed a contract with iXS Sports Division to use their dirt and full face helmets and body protection.

Known as «The Big Claw» or the «Candyman» within the freeriding community, Ryan Berrecloth is going to focus on a movie project of his own this year. He intends to deliver a series of video segments themed «Ryan wants to stoke you out» periodically during this season. As Ryan Berrecloth says about his own movie project: «This project will be my focus for the back half of the year. I'm planning to release a set of high quality web videos segments with a different underlying concept for each video, and various riders will be a part of the series.»
